Lad Falls Into Quarry and Nearly Drowns.

HEROES OF THE EAST END

Warm Stove and Dry Clothes Soon
Revives Victim From His Chills.

John C. Fry, the five-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. John Fry, and living in the eastern part of the city came nearly drowning in the Smith stone quarry on Kocheer street this morning. He was playing on the ice with his sled when the ice gave away and the boy went into the water. The chill of the water and the sharp edge of the ice made it impossible for him to help himself and would have soon drowned had it not been for two young companions who were near the quarry.

Othel Kramer, aged eight, and Carl Slusser, aged six, saw the Fry boy's danger and risked their own lives to save their companion. They hurriedly crawled to the edge of the ice and by getting hold of the unfortunate boy's hand, managed to drag him from his perilous position.

The lad was then taken to a warm room and his clothes were dried and he was cured of his chill.

He had fallen in water deep enough to cover his body to his head but a short distance from the place the water is extremely deep and it is probable he could not have been saved.

The two young fellows who rescued the lad are the heroes of the city since their daring acts of pulling the companion from the water without getting into the pool.
