SEATTLE, Sept. 2.—A Renton, Wash., father, three of whose sons failed to return home last night, found two of their bodies today at the bottom of an abandoned test shaft of a coal mine near Renton.

The boys, James Geary, 6, and his brother, Willard, 15, were the victims of a deadly gas, commonly known as "black damp," police said.

The third son, Joe, and a friend named Lorenz, also may have perished.
