

UNDER FALLEN ROCK.

A Great Mass of Stone Falls in a Michigan Mine—Eleven Workmen Buried—One Is Rescued Alive—Four Dead Bodies Recovered—The Rest Not Yet Found.

ISHPEMING, Mich., Sept. 30.—At 5 o'clock Thursday morning eleven men were buried under an enormous fall of rock in No. 8 shaft of the Norrie mine, which employs 2,000 workmen.

An investigation of the ground showed that an immense amount of rock had fallen into the slope where the unfortunates were working.

The Norrie mine is operated by the Metropolitan Iron & Land Company, with head offices at Milwaukee. The mine was first wrought in 1885, when it entered the shipping list with 15,000 tons. In 1890 it reached the enormous output of 900,000 tons, and this year it will exceed the million mark. The mine has been operated on the safest possible lines and it is looked upon by miners as the safest large mine to work in the Lake Superior district.

ISHPEMING, Mich., Oct. 1. — A dispatch from Ironwood says that one man, a miner named Abraham Thompson, was rescued alive from the fated Norrie mine at 10 a. m. Friday. He is uninjured, but was so fearfully scared by his thirty hours' imprisonment that he can scarcely speak. He was in a "room" by himself, and does not know where the other ten men were.

Following is a correct list of the missing men: Frank Dausham, Samuel Dausham, John Johnson, miners; Simon Veclein, John Bloomquist, Herman Erickson, Jacob Sundquist, timber crew; Matt Mother, John Hermannson, trammers, and Michael Downs, skip tender.
