REMAINS OF WILLIAM DWYER TAKEN FROM MINNIE HEALEY.

TO HOLD INQUEST TO-MORROW

Fourth Body of Victims of Fatal Cave Uncarthed-Found Upright With Arm Above Head-Three Funerals This Afternoon.

After having been buried for more than 48 hours, the body of William Dwyer, one of the five victims of the fatal cave of ground at the Minnie Healey mine on Thursday afternoon, was recovered yesterday. The body was taken out about 5:30 o'clock after having been in sight for an hour and a half. A brother of the dead man was at the mine when the body was brought to the surface. Immediately was brought to the surface. Immediately afterward Coroner Egan was notified, and gave permission for the removal of the remains to the undertaking rooms of Sherman & Reed. There an inquest will be held to-morrow afternoon at 2 o'clock to determine the responsibility, if any, for the deaths of the five men, who were at work in ground which had been pronounced dangerous. There is still one body, that of Isaac Abrams, which is burled in the stopes where the cave occurred.

Duried in the stopes where the cave oc-curred.

Dwyer was 33 years of age, and was well known in Butte, where he had work-ed as a miner for 20 years. His home was at 163 South Okiahoma street, where a widow and three children now live. Ar-rangements for the funeral will not be completed until after the inquest.

The funerals of Thomas Haggerty, Thomas Furlong and Antone Tennitti, who lost their lives in the cave of Thurs-day, and whose bodies were recovered within a few hours after the fatality, will take place this afternoon. The funerals will take place at the respective resi-dences, and services will be conducted simultaneously at three Catholic churches. The interments will be made about the same time at the Catholic cemetery. Serv-ices over the remains of Haggerty will be same time at the Catholic cemetery. Services over the remains of Haggerty will be held at St. Mary's church, those over the remains of Furlong will be held at St. Patrick's church, and the last sad fites over the remains of Tennitti will be said at the Sacred Heart church.

over the remains of Tennitti will be said at the Sacred Heart church.

John Byrne, state mine inspector, and John J. Barry, his deputy, yesterday made an inspection of the ground and the general conditions of the Minnie Healey mine at the point in the stopes of the 1,000 level where the cave occurred. Mr. Barry had made a previous inspection shortly after the cave on Thursday afternoon. What the inspections discovered or concluded from the conditions will be made known when they testify at the inquest to-morrow afternoon. Messrs, Byrne and Barry were at the mine when the body of Dwyer was unearthed, or rather when it was brought into sight. They did not remain until the body was taken out, as there was no necessity for their further presence after the inspection.

When the body of Dwyer was discovered by the searchers it was upright, and the right arm was raised above the head, indicating that Dwyer had, when caught by the mass of rock and dirt, been able to force his arm up in an effort to extricate himself. The next instant the arm was caught, and then death ensued. The place where the body was found was in the raise near where the body of Tennitti was recovered. The body was badly crushed, and in such condition that ne one other than those who recovered it was allowed to view it. It is understood that the fu-neral of Dwyer will take place at his late home, but the time has not been decided

Coroner Egan decided definitely last night on the time for the inquest. He had night on the time for the inquest. He had announced that in all probability it would be to-morrow afternoon, but there was no absolute certainty as to that. When the body of Dwyer was taken out last evening the coroner said there would be no use in delaying the investigation beno use in delaying the investigation beyond to-morrow, even though the body of Abrams be not recovered by that time, as one inquest will determine the cause and responsibility for all of the five
