

TRYING HARD TO REACH MAN

Miners Hurry Rescue Work of Entombed Comrade.

BUTTE, Mont., Feb. 8.—Rescuers are today making frantic efforts to reach Richard Rogers, a miner, who has been entombed under tons of rocks and earth since late Saturday night. Rogers was caught in a cave-in in the Gagnon mine of the Anaconda Copper company. The bodies of two men who were instantly killed, have been recovered, and two others caught in the cave-in were taken out alive, but died after being brought to the surface.

Rescuers were able to talk to Rogers today. He said one of his feet was pinned beneath a huge rock and that he feared he would die of thirst. The rescuers were endeavoring to force a pipe through to him.

After being entombed beneath tons of rock and earth for thirty-two hours Richard Rogers, who was buried with four other miners by a cave-in in the Gagnon mine of the Anaconda copper company, was rescued alive today. Rogers was weak from hunger and thirst but only slightly injured. He escaped with a few bruises about the body.

Four men were killed by the cave-in. The bodies of Andrew Evison and Michael Zerc have not yet been recovered. The other two dead are Joe Faber and J. R. Fay. The men were timbering up an inclined shaft when fifty feet of rock gave way. Richard Tiddy, another miner, saved his life by climbing a ladder as the rock came down.

1915 Richard Rogers rescued from Gagnon mine

Clipped By:

usmra_rob

Tue, Jan 24, 2023