

Hope of Rescue of Miners Is Given Up

Feet of One of Men Entombed in Wilkeson, Wash., Mine Discovered Protuding From Debris—Four Others Missing

Wilkeson, Wash., Dec. 20.—(U. P.)—Hope of finding the five men entombed in the Wilkeson mine early Wednesday, alive, was destroyed Thursday by discovery of the feet of one of the miners sticking out from under tons of rocks in the entry in which he and his companions were working at the time of the accident.

The rescue party is working to exhume the bodies. Four more men are under the debris. Those missing are: William Scroup, married, two children; John Tomco, married, seven children; Joseph Rusnak, married, six children; Mike Zemk, married, four children, and Peter Marchetti, married, two children.

George Thurston and Jacob Fliess got out through an airshaft late yesterday by wading in water up to their chins.
