

Hope for Entombed Miners Now Given Up

Wilkeson, Wash, Dec. 20.—Hope of finding the five men entombed in the Wilkeson mine early yesterday, alive, was destroyed today by the discovery of the feet of one of the miners sticking out from under tons of rocks and dirt in the entry in which he and his companions were working at the time of the accident. The rescue party was working today to exhume the rest of the body. Four more men are under the debris. Those missing are: William Scroup, married, two children; John Tomeo, married, seven children; Joseph Rusnak, married, six children; Mike Zemk, married, four children and Peter Marchetti, married, two children.

George Thurston and Jacob Fliess got out through an air shaft late yesterday by wading in water up to their chins.
