The body of C. Testas, a shot firer, who was imprisoned in tunnel No. 2 of the Moffat Coal Company's mine by an explosion of firedamp at Oak Creek, was recovered by a searching party which has been working continuously since the accident. The body was found in the K and L entry of the mine. The body when found was not burned, as the searchers had anticipated, but was prostrate on the floor of the tunnel with a coat around the head. It is believed by the rescue party that Testas, scenting the toxic gas, covered his head with his coat in an effort to escape the fumes.
