Castle Gate, Utah, Mar. 11.—Ninety-one bodies have been recovered from the Castle Gate mine number 2 in which an explosion recently trapped the entire force of workmen.

Pushing Way to Charred Bodies.

Castle Gate, Utah, Mar. 11.—Castle Gate mine number 2 gave up its dead in increasing numbers as rescue crews pushed their way into the inner recesses of the huge mine during the night. Working incessantly, stopping only now and then to eat a sandwich or drink steaming hot coffee, dispatched into the mine by helpers, four rescue crews from the Columbia, Kenilworth, Sunnyside and Hiawatha mines received sixteen bodies during their four hour shift beginning at 2 o'clock this morning. Of the 173 coal miners entombed in the mine by three terrific explosions early Saturday morning 95 remained to be recovered. Mine officials predict that the last body will be recovered by tonight. Eight of the 16 bodies taken from the mine during the night were found 7,000 feet from the escape way and were so badly mutilated by the force of the blasts that they were unrecognizable. The last four bodies brought to the surface by the night rescue crew were listed at the mine identification bureau and at the downtown morgue as "unidentified." Sixteen bodies now are classed in this manner and the fear is expected that as the rescue crews continue their operations throughout the mine today that this number will be greatly increased.
