

BODIES OF SIX TAKEN FROM BLASTED MINE

PARROTT, Va., January 19. — Bodies of six men killed in an explosion deep in the Pulaski anthracite mine were recovered today by a rescue squad which had fought for hours against debris and gases to reach their entombed comrades.

The dead are: Frank Seffered, Dewey Seffered, Harvey Seffered, none of them brothers; Ernest Snead and Foster and Artie Boyd, brothers. The positions of their bodies indicated all had been killed outright.

Cause of the blast, which roared through the main shaft only a few minutes after the twenty men of the night shift had entered the mine, probably never will be known, a mine official said today.

"The cause of the explosion has been lost forever with the deaths of the six men in that isolated section of the mine," he said. "The explosion appeared to come from that part of the mine and the real facts were lost when the men died."
