

GRASS VALLEY MINER EFFECTS HEROIC RESCUE

Carries Stricken Companion
4,000 Feet To Hoist

GRASS VALLEY (Nevada Co.), Jan. 26.—A heroic rescue of Russell Miller, victim of bad air in the Pennsylvania Mine, occurred Tuesday, when Donald Pascoe, a young miner, descended alone into the mine and found Miller in an unconscious condition at the bottom of a winze on the 1,700-foot level.

Pascoe, himself feeling the effects of the impure air occasioned by the fact the ventilating equipment of the mine was out of commission through lack of water, succeeded in transporting Miller a distance of 4,000 feet to the hoisting station, where he was taken to the surface.

Miss Companion.

Miller, Pascoe and Sam Veale were sent into the mine to adjust pumps and other machinery for a temporary shutdown. Pascoe and Veale completed their work and returned to the surface, only to find that Miller had not appeared. It was then that Pascoe re-entered the mine alone to search for his companion.

A shut-down at the Pennsylvania was forced by the snow-clogged water supply ditches.

1933 Russell Miller rescued in the Pennsylvania Mine in CA

Clipped By:

usmra_rob

Fri, Dec 31, 2021