A BREAKER BOY KILLED.

The Body of David Llewellyn, of Summit Hill, Horribly Mangled.

Special to the Miners' Journal.

LANSFORD, July 11. — A breaker boy named David Llewellyn was almost instantly killed in No. 5 breaker of the Lehigh Coal and Navigation Company, and his body fearfully mangled yesterday. He was 15 years of age, and was employed as a slate-picker. As the coal was coming down the schutes slowly, young Llewellyn left his seat and walked to another part of the breaker. He picked up a piece of belt and held it against the shaft at one end of the main screen.

The belt was finally caught in the shaft and before Llewellyn could release his hold of the belt he was drawn up and whirled around the shaft with fearful rapidity. His body was drawn through a small space and was terribly mangled before the breaker machinery could be stopped. A sickening sight was presented to the other employees and after Llewellyn's body had been removed to his home at Summit Hill, the colliery suspended work for the day.
