

UNION SERVICE FOR SIX MINE VICTIMS

Nelson Creek Mine Resumes Operation After Burial of Blast Victims.

Funeral services for six of the Nelson mine disaster victims were conducted at the Nelson Baptist church at 2:00 p. m. last Friday by Rev. Elbert Winkler, of this city. The six bodies were then interred in the nearby cemetery.

The bodies of Peter Huter, age 55, and his sons, Archie, age 29, and Leonard, age 27, were placed in one grave; the bodies of George Brandon, age 42, and his son Carl Brandon, age 19, in another, and the body of Mathew King in the third.

Members of the Masonic fraternity had charge of the burial of the elder Huter; the burial of the elder Brandon was in charge of the Knights of Pythias, and the burial of Mathew King was in charge of the Junior Order of United Mechanics.

The burial of Gabe Woodruff had been conducted on the previous Wednesday and that of Tom Richardson on Thursday. Rev. Winkler preached the funeral of the former and Rev. Stuart, of Drakesboro, the latter.

The mine is now operating on about the same schedule as before the disaster and the injured men are rapidly recovering.
